

All Roads Lead to...

By Wanderer

Asphalt roads unknown.
Dirt roads untraversed.
Concrete played and
Grass grazed upon.
All roads look different but are the same.

All roads must begin.
They will eventually find an end.
There are neat things along the way and also boring land galore.

Take the back roads if you are not in a hurry.
Rush along the freeway if you are.

Walk along the sidewalk, or, if you are up to it, even jog.

The windy roads are nice because they are different.
Do not let forks in the road intimidate you nor
Circle-turns confuse.
Use your signals and do not bumper ride.
Allow animals to cross, but don't swerve if you won't survive.

Travel by car, or bus or train.
Meet new people along the way.
Don't let it be a blur.

Don't rush past all people and things.
You may not see it now, but we're headed the same exact way.

The road of life, whether paved or unpaved, leads to death.

Or so the living say.
